“Given the tremendous amount of uncertainty and transformation now occurring throughout the power industry, many owners and operators of power facilities are creatively reshaping their business operations...Whether it is the buying or selling of sites, working as a contractor for others, or developing plants in foreign countries, the depth and scope of risks associated with these business practices are rapidly changing. Power industry professionals are encouraged now, more than ever, to fully understand what the impact of such business practices will be to their insurance and risk management portfolios.” (Excerpt from an article published by Robert Muncil of Cool Insurance Agency, Inc. which appeared in Hydro Review Magazine.
